Inequalities in Southern Africa, the 2030 Agenda and the Operationalization of Inequality Reducing Policies – Fostering Regional Engagement Cape Town | 12–13 November 2018

There is a broad consensus that high inequalities are detrimental to economic growth, sustainable development and the implementation of the 2030 Agenda. Even though strategies to reduce inequalities pose many challenges, if successful they will release binding constraints hampering inclusive, sustainable development.

This conference aims to bring together an influential group of policy makers, scholars and representatives from civil society who share a commitment to reducing inequalities. The engagement will assess and locate Southern Africa inequality within broader, global and African contexts. It seeks to extract the lessons to be learned from a set of high inequalities contexts in the region, with examples from Namibia, Botswana, Zambia and South Africa.

Based on these interrogations, effective current policy directions and additional solutions will be tabled, discussed and honed. The conference further aims to enhance cross-sectoral and cross-country support and approaches towards reducing inequalities.
